PRESERVATION IS GOOD BUSINESS

Frederick County, Maryland, contains many fine examples of preservation and industrial development working together for the benefit of both. How this partnership works in practice will be the topic presented by Cherilyn Widell and her associate Mr. Callan.

Ms. Widell, a former resident of Haddonfield, did her master's degree work at George Washington University in American Studies in the Smithsonian program, and is presently Director of Frederick County Office of Historic Preservation. Mr. Callan is the Chairman of the Historic District Commission for Frederick City, Maryland.

Their illustrated talk will present the Frederick County, Maryland, experience of fixing up old buildings within their historic district. Both will discuss the kind of activity needed to keep our town's historic heritage a vibrant part of our society. The topic, Preservation is Good Business, is one that puts the past into perspective with the present.

REPORT OF EVENTS PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE

At the September meeting, Society members will hear news of the summer's activities; an update on the restoration of the Samuel Mickle (Hip Roof) House; newest gifts to the Society and programs planned by the Woman's Committee and the Evening group.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

Early in the summer, the Society issued "Haddonfield: Its Life with Railroads 1854 - 1976," by Marion Pennypacker Tatem. Priced at $2.00, this pamphlet is the perfect gift for the railroad buff or the student of local lore.

Just off the press is "Place Names in and About Haddonfield," by William R. Farr. This 68-page booklet, priced at $3.00, is bursting with fascinating facts about the origin of many of the geographical and the physical features of the local landscape, homes, mills and industry and their names, as well as of one-thriving communities whose only trace today is a name.

ELIZABETH G. DANENHOWER

Elizabeth Danenhower was one of the Society's best friends and most active supporters. As Chairman of the Woman's Committee, she started the Flea Market which has become one of the most successful Woman's Committee undertakings. Not only was she generous in her gifts of manuscripts, furniture and clothing, but Elizabeth also communicated her interest and enthusiasm to many others. Though she no longer walks among us, the legacies Elizabeth left to us will long remain and be remembered.
